I want to catch your gaze across A room of other girls; To earn a smile that's just for me, Your diamond amongst pearls. I want to see your eyes just graze The cotton of my dress - Tenderness's twinkling fun Removing my distress. I want to feel your warm, firm touch That holds my heart so safe, With no fear of Rejection's cold Or Scornful Mocking's chafe. I want to be your favourite toy, The one that you like best; The one you'll cuddle, use lots, love, Whilst playing or at rest. I want to feel direct connection, To know what's in your mind, To hear your heart speak future hopes, And know what's left behind. I want your hands to guide me On the road that Normals travel; To know that my companion loves To make my fears unravel. I want to let you make me whole, To be who you desire; To know that I support you too, Provide what you require. I want you as my One True Love, To know that when you take me, The grin and fun of horniness Will follow when you break me. I want you to wipe away my tears That come from being broken - Gone, Sorrow, from my lonely past; Now, Joy abounds unspoken. This poem only available on Lush Stories .
