We cannot see each other but In your eyes I am beautiful. We cannot feel each other but I live in your heart. We are so far away but You are always close to me. We cannot know each other but You make me smile. We cannot hear each other but You make me laugh. We cannot touch each other but I sense you holding me. All of our senses so acutely stimulated By each other and yet we are alone. We cannot make love and yet We have orgasms together. A large part of me is cerebral Living a life of intellectual gymnastics But living in my head with you Is entirely and impossibly sensual. It touches my heart – delicious ambiguity.
