

Farewell

By writingvixen

Published on Lush Stories on 26 Mar 2012

You needed so much more than I could ever be.

<https://www.lushstories.com/stories/love-poems/farewell.aspx>

You stole my thoughts and turned them into words. My pain was so real, your voice went unheard. You needed so much more than I could ever be. My damaged heart longed to remain free. You held me too tightly and like sand in your fist I gently blew away. My cocoon was stopping my growth, my metamorphosis was incomplete. You were a beautiful pollenating flower withering in Spring's infinite heat. My wings expanded and a butterfly emerged; confident, inquisitive, ready for the world to see. "Farewell," I shouted. And your reply was, "Looks like our love was not meant to be." @2012

Writingvixen