My heart aches for something that didn't exist; It was not enough to even consider it a tryst. A longing for a single moment in time; When I thought what I wanted was actually mine. Just a lie I foolishly chose to believe; From my anguish a chance to get some relief. Little did I know my anguish would double; Feeling unappreciated for all of my trouble. I found another who needed the same; But I gave him away just so I could stay sane. I don't have any more energy, I don't want to try; Let someone else take the wheel and let me just ride. Coast a while I don't care which direction; Escape the days that are filled with reflection. Stop taking care of everyone else; Let it all go and only worry about myself. I wish I could float through life care free; Just not give a shit when I see someone in need. Be callous and cold, totally unforgiving; I can't adapt myself to that way of living. No matter how hard that I try; My compassion I can't seem to hide. Just once I wish those feelings were returned; I'm not holding my breath that much I have learned. No waiting around forever just so I can see; My disappointment grow and my common sense leave. I've got them lining up right outside of my door; My inspiration is gone I don't want to bother anymore. I think I'm just going to switch teams for a while; With my girlfriend who really loves my style. Never makes me wait and showers me with praise; Spending time with her makes for much brighter days. Maybe that will ease my aching heart; Forget about the things that tore it apart. Go on an exploration of something new; Forget about all the memories I have of you.
