A poem for my sweet friend Savanna

She's looking for love in all the wrong places, Where she goes all the men have disguises on their faces. Most of them are telling great big lies, If their wives found out they would certainly cry. She wants a man that will be honest and true, Romantic, loving and sexy too. She has so much love that she wants to give, She would even travel across the sea to live. I tell her, "Dear you must change the venue you are looking in." All the men around this place are only interested in sin. Still she will search to find her shining knight, Her repeatedly broken heart is her biggest plight. Can there possibly be a love out there that is true? This is exactly what I wish my dear, especially for you.
