You claim you love As you emerge from years of dust you spent just a night making me drunk kissed, proclaiming love I know now, was mere lust you poked me drunk took my cherished virginity I hardly felt you in You left me bleeding miserable, weak and alone you smiled and walked to another girl you left me lonely, crying to another girl and now deserted, alone you walk back to claim your love for me? and want me again years have gone by as you left me lonely crying over the night I spent with you drunk What you think am I? A fool, a broken girl? You did break my heart and betrayed you lured me to believe your false and fake promises of eternal love and bliss All these long years I picked the pieces back to mend and again be the girl that I was and shall always be I threw you out from my heart and mind feeling you a fake and cheat that you always have been and shall always be I fell for your lies once but never again shall I be you're the girl I was the night you poked me
