A poem for you.

Walking down the jetway A million emotions churning Anticipating our first face to face As I step into the terminal Scanning the crowd I see a silly cardboard sign "Hiya Wes" I laugh out loud My eyes lock onto your angelface Both of us smiling widely Only we know the inside joke I nearly trip over my carry-on Rushing into your arms We embrace like long-time lovers Hugs, kisses, smiles, giggles, and even more kisses Before we come up for air We know neither of us should be here But it is a one-time experience we need to have A time out from reality That just has to be It was inevitable Unstoppable So wrong, but so right The promise of sand between our toes Gentle breezes The sun warming our bones from a long winter Our bodies clinging for warmth A stolen weekend Away from cares and worries Just us Just two days of complete bliss And then I wake up smiling The time out is over until my next dream of you
